A young men's song, making fun of boastfulness.

I was a man, a man of power (1); I could topple mountains with my chest and rake them with my feet (2). I carried Rīga (the capital of Latvia) in the palm of my hand and Jelgava (the seat of the former Duchy of Courland) under my arm (3). I tucked Liepāja, just a small town, into my hat (4), and I could even move the corner of a country as great as Poland.
